Dear Hiring Team,

I am excited to announce my candidacy for a pilot role that suits my lifestyle and varied experience. I am pursuing an organization that describes its ideal aspirant as competent, dependable, adaptable, collaborative, committed to safety, and motivated to grow. I am that candidate; however, this does not describe the best version of myself. These qualities describe who I am at my worst. They are my default characteristics, having been shaped in combat as a medic, refined through counseling wounded soldiers, tested as an entrepreneur, and proven in the cockpit flying pipeline patrol. The forces that forged these qualities are the tools I use to craft the methods and standards that I bring to the team and the mission.

I bring the experience and discipline necessary to meet the demands of your flight department. My time as a pipeline pilot required me to operate at low altitudes, in challenging conditions, and with exceptional precision and situational awareness. This type of flying refined skills I had already developed, including risk management, adaptability, and sustained focus over long duty periods. Beyond aviation, my service as a combat medic and counselor for wounded soldiers instilled in me a calm, mission-first mindset, and my work building a wildfire mitigation business reflects initiative, leadership, and accountability. Together, these experiences have prepared me to bring both technical skills and sound judgment into my aviation career.

My goal is to join a mission-oriented team that is serious about safety and professionalism. My blend of technical skill and steadfast character aligns with your mission, and I am eager to contribute to the success of your team. I welcome the opportunity to discuss how my experience and mindset can serve your organization's needs. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Ryan Behm
